Dector Lloyd asked her some pointed questions—if she knew her son was going to kill himself and if she passed him the poison—but she remained calm, answering the interregations in a low voice. She denied emphatically that she had given her son any poison. She said that she visited him twice on the day of his suicide because after the first visit she heard that Governor Stephens had taken up the case and she wanted to cally the good news to know it. If he had mentioned it she said she certainly would have attempted to dissimate him from his surpose.

Jailer Anton Huchler was recalled to the stand. On Sunday afternoon he said he had been informed by James H. Marshall, who was a furrer compation of Callaway's in jail, that Callaway had received poson in the living of a necktle. Marshall iold Captain Huchler that he did not see the poison, but had been told about it by Callaway in a moment of confidence. Dector Lloyd ordered that Marshall be summoned to appear before him this morning at 9 o'clock, to which time the inquity was continued.

John Kiely, a former ceilmate of Callaway, was piaced on the stand to explain the stories he is said to have circulated to the effect that Callaway was soaking match heads in water and collecting the poison which he afterwards dried to a powder and sewed in his undershirt. Kiely said he did not see Callaway sew the powder in his clothes, but he had seen him soaking the matches in water.
